Make it a music moment

Set up

Review the instrument reference first. Give each student or pair a different card and 16 counters. There are ten arrangements; for larger classes, use pairs or teams. Matching card numbers have identical boards.

Play and verify

Call names in an unpredictable order. Students cover matching pictures. Four marked spaces in a row, column or diagonal wins; there is no free space. Check the line against your called-name list and the matching card key.

Scope and artwork

This set features 16 selected concert-band brass and woodwinds, not every instrument in these families. Cartoons are based on real instrument photographs and are not to scale. They support recognition, not detailed anatomy or fingering instruction. Models, finishes and key systems vary. The clarinet pictured uses a German key system; this is an identification game, not a fingering chart.

Removable parts

The English horn and bassoon are shown with bocals but without their replaceable double reeds. Point these out before play; do not teach that these parts are unnecessary.

Print and teach

Student cards are pages 1–10. Keep pages 11–17 with the teacher: reference, guide, card keys and image credits. Print at actual size on US Letter. For monochrome copies, use your printer’s grayscale setting and check that the silver keywork stays visible.

Look-alike focus

Compare the alto’s short neck, tenor’s arched neck and baritone’s upper loop. Compare the trumpet’s straighter profile with the cornet’s compact wrap. Compare the euphonium’s piston valves with this tuba’s rotary valves; other models vary. Use the reference rather than size alone.

Extend learning

Ask students to group woodwinds and brass or describe one visible difference between related instruments. Saxophones are woodwinds despite their metal bodies. Use recordings or live demonstrations separately for sound recognition.
